Handwritten Burmese script on a palm leaf manuscript. The text is arranged in approximately 12 horizontal lines across the upper portion of the leaf. The script is a traditional form of Burmese, likely from the 18th or 19th century. The leaf shows signs of age, including discoloration and two distinct circular holes, which were traditionally used for threading a cord to bind multiple leaves together into a book format. The text appears to be a continuous passage, possibly a religious or historical narrative, given the context of such manuscripts.

The lower portion of the palm leaf is mostly blank, showing the natural texture and color of the dried leaf material. There are some faint, illegible markings and small dark spots scattered across this area, which may be bleed-through from the reverse side or simply surface imperfections of the leaf.
